London, July 25.—Great curtosity and considerable anxiety is manifested over the outcome of to day's deliberations in Dublin on the question of setting the machinery of the Coercion art in motion. The curiosity is confined to England and the auxiety fof ta Ireland, but in public is a stone or England and the auxlety felt in Ireland, but in neither is the belief as strong as it was a few weeks ago that the law will be enforced as rigorously as the Tories would like to have done. Of the conferres the Lord Lieutenant is an uncompromising Tory. Mr. Baltour was of the same stripe until the recent Parliamentary election forced the Government to modify its policy toward Ireland. Lord Ashbeurne is inclined to give the tenants.

In view of this variety of opinion among the ruler of Ireland, it is reasonably safe to pre-dict that an extremely moderate appli-ention of the Coercion law will be the called upon, and it is safe to say that the magistrates and county official-siummond to Dublin to report the con-dition of their respective localities are receive instructions will experience in little surprise at the character of their orders if they have charisted the like of peeling off oils scores through the

A CHEST CLOSE is cast ever Ireland. Many of the peasants do not understand, the import of the new measure. They know that the dreaded Crimos act has been passed, and, in a blind sort of way, realizand, in a blind cort of way, realize that they are threatened with some new calculty. Eviditors they know how to fight against, but they are not prepared for the authories of a measure which delivers them for judgmost into the hands of those when they have been taught to regard as carenies.
